A World at Unrest

MICHAEL HERMAN

APR 09, 2026

Agitation has a way of breaking out all over. Independent conflicts arise simultaneously somehow, as if a ripple of anxiety becomes a wave crashing against multiple nations at once.

While the focus right now is on the Middle East, in my ancestral nation of Ireland there is some serious unrest. Farmers are upset about fuel prices, the average Irishman is upset about the economy, and immigrants, and their leadership appearing to support the EU stance over what benefits the average Irishman.

“Lorrie drivers”, or truck drivers as we might call them here in the US are stopping port traffic, stopping up traffic, and going on a “slow down” strike to make their feelings known. The average Irishman is behind them in full.

The people of Ireland are upset with the economy, fuel costs, the recent immigration policies that are changing the face of their neighborhoods, and increasing crime.

And unlike Americans, sitting like frogs in an ever increasing temperature in the Irish have decided to protest their situation.

Even to the extent that the government is going to call in the police against the “Lorrie drivers”, and to clear the ports so that imported product can get off the ships and their destinations.

There are questions right now as to whether or not the local Garda, or constabulary, will stand with the people, or obey their government leadership and crack down on their fellow citizens.

Further roiling the people is the season, which reminds of the uprisings, reminding that six counties were sacrificed for “peace”, and that the British still have control over Irish soil in the North.

Tensions always run high over “The Easter uprising”, and remembrances in the North over the brave men and women who gave their lives to the “troubles”. To the Catholics in the North, 1916 is always present. The “troubles” of the 1970’s were yesterday.

Add into the emotions that run hot over “the troubles” a leadership more beholden to the ridiculous ideas and policies coming from the EU, unwanted immigrants beginning to change the face of the neighborhood, and increase fuel prices to an extent that the average Irishman begins to actually suffer under the weight of it all, and you have a recipe for upheaval.

America isn’t paying a lick of attention, but the farmers and haulers in Ireland have completely shut down Dublin. They’ve shuttered the motorways with their equipment.

The average worker is waking up to the ridiculous taxation on fuels, including “carbon tax” from the “Global Warming” canard, and they’ve had enough.

Governments can no longer fool the people through taxation where the money is phony and trumped up causes but is really just creating a slush fund for the ruling class.

Sound familiar?

Over the “pond” they sell gas by the Litre, not the gallon, and the Irish are wailing about the fact that the cost of a Litre to put into their tanks has higher tax costs than the actual cost to dig it out of the North Sea, ship it, refine it, truck it, and pump it into their tanks.

Over 1/2 the cost is in taxation.

And the cost is choking the truckers, the farmers, and the working man.

The obvious means of lowering cost is to eliminate the taxes. And to begin to fight against a government that plays global games with the EU, this “carbon tax” is but one of the games being played, that harms the actual citizens of Ireland.

The Irish have had “enough”.

Sound familiar?

Here in America we’ve all had “enough” of the tail wagging the dog. We’ve had enough of open borders. We’ve had enough of social safety net programs being doled out to non-citizens, and citizens alike to the extent that being on the dole pays better than working a job.

Californians just woke up to the fact that the money spent for a train to nowhere, whose original intent was to speed the trip from Los Angeles to San Francisco, after hundreds of billions spent has produced absolutely nothing, for that amount of money they could have created a fleet of airplanes to ferry the population back and forth for free, and given the traffic quantity could have paid for 200 years of flights. Which would have negated the need for the train.

The people are waking up, we are being fleeced.

Here in America, the Democrats are stealing us blind, with the help of Republican leadership.

Over there in Europe, the EU is fucking over the citizens of every nation under the umbrella. The EU is the Democrat of Europe.

Leave it to “my Irish” to lead the charge of revolution. They might be a sotted but as a predominantly Catholic nation they have a strong moral and righteous foundation.

What did Freud say of the Irish, that they are impervious to analysis?

That is because every Irishman alive has an ongoing battle in his mind between right and wrong at all times. And to a man, when they are sinning, they know they are sinning, and have decided to do it anyway. No outside force can be as hard on an Irishman as he is on himself in his own mind.

And an Irishman is willing to give, and be charitable, but not to the extent of himself and his own.

And right now the government, in bed with those globalist assholes in the EU asking the average Irishman for more than what is required. The people are still feeling a pain they deem unworthy.

Looking back at history when anxiety grips the world, when peoples across the world are feeling a bit of unrest, the world ends up at war. Shooting an Arch Duke in Sarajevo doesn't seem to have much in common with Great Britain, France, or the US, but an awful lot of lives were lost as a result of the conflagration that followed.

The Middle East is in flames right now, China is rattling swords over Taiwan, the economy has come to a standstill in Dublin, and Americans are beginning to feel as if the American Dream is moving out-of-reach.

Could some combination of the Middle East troubles, combined with the current troubles, and married to fuel shortages worldwide, inflation, stagnant economy, unresponsive governments lead us all into World War III?

An Austrian Duke shot, a Beer Hall Putsch, small events can have a way of spiraling into the world at war.

Me? I am following the Irish problems with interest. You were probably totally unaware of what is transpiring there. Most Americans right now are probably

Notice that at the heart of civil unrest, it is the Canadian Trucker, the “Lorrie” that takes the lead?

Are they the true canary in the coal mine?

Fuel costs. Always fuel costs, or energy costs. Trust me when I say the lead motivation for a totalitarian government will be to control the masses through fuel and energy

People come to expect comfort. As a first demand. The loss of daily comfort, of the Winter, or cooling in the Summer, how will you react?

Will you bend the knee to gain back the comfort you require?

Or will you take to the streets and rip the offending leadership from their own comfort?

Those that feel the pinch of the costs, the truckers, the “Lorrie drivers”, they are at the tip of the spear.

And they’ve shut down Dublin, making a half-hour trip a seven hour stalemate

I feel the vibes. Same as they felt in 1939, or 1914, an unrest, an unease, an anxiety permeates the globe.

Is this all a harbinger of a new war to come?

I don't know. Pharma addles our brains; GMO our bodies. US military is said to spend a psych warfare as it does kinetic. FOX and CNN will divide us. Agents provocateurs (100s also a the Seattle WTO protest in 1999) give carefully curated images to the spin make the good guys look bad. Canada debanked the truckers and their supporters. 80 Americans are on the dole, dependent on Uncle Sam, just as sociopaths want it. It is hard to see a path through this, but we have to fight as long and hard as we can. I still think the violence ala Gandhi and MLK Jr is the right approach. We need a change of spirit and that come through Antifa tactics. May God bless the Irish truckers and freedom fighter ever
