I have always enjoyed your substack. I'm sure your scrotum chronicles were hysterical! I'm going on in my life right now and haven't been able to keep up with my regular reading. I'll be back to it soon. I also stopped payment for them - I'm retired, on a fixed income. I just can't afford to pay for them. Many are very deserving - yours included.

Sir, you don't appear to engage much with your readership. Jon Rappoport does either, so maybe that is just a style thing. Rogan said he doesn't even read his column section. Anyway, I am quite onboard with blackpilling, which I view as telling the truth when there is not a lot of hope, all things considered. But the only way forward is the truth, regardless of affiliation, alliances etc. The only viable solution will emerge. I was at another substack recently and felt alone in the conversations there that admonished people to get behind the president, to limit our criticism because the Leader needs our support now. I like David Knight's recommendation to advocate on an issue by issue basis, and not fall into the trap of identity politics, e.g., MAGA. I hope Michael Herman does not come to bite his tongue, or reduce the sensitivity of his detector. Best of luck to you.

I read your Substack daily. I will admit I look forward to my coffee in the morning opening your daily thoughts. You and I share many life experiences. We are the same age, Irish Catholics, and traveling sales is also my game for almost 42 years and going strong. I don't always agree with you, nor should I, but I appreciate your "honest" opinions always. God bless you and your family.

Dan,

Appreciate the reply. Forty-two years in road sales, there ought to be a reward, an Oscar, or Tony. After that long even the big steak dinner isn't enough. I'm at 48 years and still having to get out there. Last week's non-drive to Panama City Beach was no picnic. But there are no good flight options you want to go through Atlanta.

It's a jungle out there.

I tend to like the black pill humor of Tim Dillon's Saturday podcasts, where I referenced this particular Iran State Media rap song, which I like as well:

Tim has a great schtick. His recent work on the First Lady is comedy gold
