

When is the "Boiling Point"

I don't Know

Joe Rogan and friends were discussing this awful economy, and present state of the world with regard to costs in America. They were expressing the usual laments. They can't afford to own a home, to make ends meet you need a roommate. They are building Flock cameras to spy on us everywhere. Government has failed us all.

Mark Normand was part of the discussion, and he came up with the absolute line of the day, I wish I had written it first, he summed up in a single line what I've been pondering, and worry about in my idle hours.

When the discussion reached the point about our general reaction to the current situation, Normand said, "but has it reached the boiling point"?

And there you are. From the mouth of a half-talented comedian.

The question I've been marinating in my mind, absent the ability to express in succinctly.

Donald Trump unilaterally went to war in Iran for Israel. He increased defense spending to 1.5 trillion dollars. For a Pentagon that has failed eight straight years, a Pentagon that cannot say where the money goes.

We have USAID and NGO payments into the billions that disappear achieving absolutely nothing. We have Medicaid, and Medicare fraud into the billions per Particularly in the blue states.

Fraud is rampant. Regular, everyday, policeman and fireman and lifeguards in cities are retiring on pensions of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Everyone in government, or who receives a government paycheck appears to be gaming the

Our taxes in the middle class now exceed fifty percent of our income. Add it up and you are all in the 35% Federal tax bracket. Some have state taxes on top of that, and live in states where they have a sales tax, with the exception of just a few states.

Then there are the taxes we pay on gasoline, on all the bills from the electric bill through the cable bill, onto the phone bill, and on, and on. There are “taxes” in getting a driver’s license renewed, or tags for the car.

If you are middle class in America today you are paying in excess of 50% of what you earn back out into taxes to a system that has been shown to be nakedly corrupt.

Trump has us at war. Our “peace President”, the man who ran on being a man who would keep us from wars. Who campaigned on ending the Ukraine conflict.

A sandwich costs thirty-two dollars, lunch with the wife is over a hundred, and easily over two hundred if both of you decide to imbibe.

Across the board costs have grown dramatically.

I mentioned a few columns ago our children are the “haves”, and “have nots”. I purchased a starter home almost 20 years ago. Traded up. Then traded up again and prices rose. They now have a million in equity in their homes. The one that did not rent, because they had a specific area where they wanted to live, who didn’t want the starter home in the suburbs route, they fell behind, then fell behind more, behind even more, and now housing prices may be out of reach for them.

As their siblings who did buy that crappy little starter home, and use that as a stone to move up, then move up again have gained a million in equity. Your vic can change dramatically depending on which side of that line you fall into. The one who now sits with a million and more in home equity as they rode housing prices up, versus the one who didn't and fell a million behind.

And so Mark Normand has asked the question that has been sitting with me up for a while now, "when is the boiling point"?

If we haven't revolted with over 50% of our work effort being taken from us and nakedly stolen before our very eyes, if we haven't revolted as they've stolen the American Dream from our youth, if we haven't revolted as they take us into a world where we have no business pursuing, if we haven't revolted as we watch and see a donor class just own those we sent to Congress, and Washington, DC to do our bidding, but who are quickly co-opted, then exactly what will it take for us all to stand?

As for myself, to paraphrase an old rock band in Pink Floyd, I have become comfortably numb.

I have realized that everything we see and hear is meant as a distraction. The ridiculous arguments, the debates, the talking heads, all the news, and virtually all mainstream media, all of that blather is meant to just distract us and serve as a background chaos to keep us emotionally charged, so that we expend all that anger on "the system", at our neighbor, at the Left, or at the Right, our ire misdirected so we cannot focus where it belongs.

So at what point does our distress "boil over", at what point will those first few to climb the gates, not to attack the politicians who've been purchased up in front of us, but to take the anger out on those manipulating it all behind the scenes?

When will the billionaires have to escape to their backyard bunkers to survive wrath of the common man who tires of their greed?

Surely anyone paying attention has come to the realization that we have a Uni that no matter which way we vote the Oligarchs win. We have a Congress und control over the House and Senate, and White House, and cannot get a vote or ID.

Excuse me, that is instructive.

We are all well aware of the money flow from government, to the NGO, onto t class, who then sends some portion back through either the family members h to the political campaign of the bought and purchased, or both. DOGE made i that we are losing billions of dollars to this system of corruption.

We knew if we voted Kamala we'd get war with Iran, and continued funding to so they could finish their genocide of Gaza. We didn't expect that Trump would far as to go to war with American lives against Iran. So it didn't matter how w American people voted, AIPAC won either way. They control our government Not the constituents. The Jewish lobby has full control. They can spend thirty and remove a Thomas Massie from office. We all just witnessed that. happen.

Trump handed the same lobby Tik Tok as a contribution prize. Seems Tik Tok some videos deemed antisemitic, couldn't leave that alone. Better to put it in t of those who wish to censor such talk and behavior. Same with CBS News. Sar all of mainstream media.

I no longer care who wins. Trump's betrayal was the final straw. I'll vote again anyone associated with the Uni-Party. I've vote against the Neo-Cons.

Past that, I have zero concern for whether or not the DSA takes over all of the Democratic Party, and whether or not they win office and defeat the Republic:

At forty trillion in debt, and the pension bomb of both Federal and State employment, the end is nigh. The only thing the DSA can do is hasten our demise. Might as well pull off the band-aid, crash now, rather than later.

When will we reach the boiling point?

And when we do, will the people storm the gates of DC foolishly, or will they realize we need to tear the Oligarchs from their lair, to go after those running a Palantir, Google, a Facebook, Flock. All these firms participating with our own government in full-time surveillance of the American People. These are the enemies of the people. Not the politicians they compromised. Although they'll need to answer as well.

Someone made Fauci a mass murderer, he isn't smart enough to accomplish it on his own. Of course he deserves punishment, but reach higher.

Trump may have taken us to war, but didn't someone write him a few hundred million dollar check for his re-election? And you want to start with Trump? Aim higher.

We aren't built like our forefathers. We aren't going to just suffer a depression in soup lines. That isn't going to happen. Not again.

This whole thing reaches a "boiling point", the average American being taxed 50% is going to take their anger outside the home. I've been to Palm Beach, I've been to Beverly Hills, those gates aren't that high.

But Normand nailed it.

We aren't at the boiling point yet.

So.

What will it take?

Where is the boiling point?

Let me ask a loaded question, allow me to become incendiary, give me some latitude what will appear to be an insane question, was Luigi Mangione just ahead of time? Is Luigi Mangione a harbinger of things to come? Did Luigi hit his boiling point, the same boiling point we may all come to at some point, did Luigi just point ahead of the crowd? Did he?

Wait, what?

You are aghast I'd ask the question? You think me insane? You think that some self-professed from the far Right of the political spectrum, a true capitalist, to broach such a topic from that perspective, that I've gone around the bend?

Excuse me, but the default of the insurance firms today is to deny the claim, delay claim, and then deny it again. Never pay, ever, if you can get away with it. Delay delay more. Only approve as the last possible resort.

Have you dealt with the insurance firms? I have. They are the worst humans and I'll tell you a true story, perhaps this might explain my sympathetic position to Mr. Mangione. As a disclaimer, I do tangentially know the family, I've dined with his parents in the home of a close friend, I've been to christenings, weddings, and events where his parents have been. A fine family overall. But I would not allow color my opinion here.

My own father died of a heart attack at the wheel of the car. Out shopping on Friday". One of his last efforts was to buy me a shirt for Christmas he thought He had a fatal heart attack while driving, the car hit a few parked cars, eventually mother, the lone passenger with him, was able to corral the car to a stop. The helicopter came, and Medivac'd my father to the hospital by air. Too late to say

I was sitting with my mother in her home three days later, planning the funeral, comforting her, when the phone rang. The insurance guy was on the line. He informed me that my dad was technically dead when the car hit the other vehicles, and since the insurance company didn't insure dead people, they were not liable for the damages done.

I informed the man we were going to pretend he never made the call. That his company was going to pay every penny, that he better never make a similar call to the hospital, or I would have the same conversation with my mother, ever. That was forty-two years ago, but nothing has changed about insurance companies except they've gotten worse. It's not even possible.

That is the insurance company. If that is how you choose to earn a living, fine. But be aware there might be consequences. Consequences such as being ripped from your office, put on trial by the mob, immediately sentenced, and sentence executed. I don't cry, but I cry not tears for the "victim" of Luigi Mangione. Act like a mob member and accept the consequences.

Don't you think the drug company executives have something to answer for to the American people at this point? No? Really?

Billionaires, and their paid toadies, can decide. Do the right thing, all is well. I was President for three-hundred-fifty-million, force him to agree to attack Iran, and you could have just vacationed in Monaco and been fine. But if you decided to care about American lives, perhaps we will see you at the trial.

As for me, I think that Luigi Mangione showed us what hitting the boiling pot is all about and how to accomplish it. When we hit it, I hope we follow his lead.

Who is truly ready for some town square tribunals, with retribution in the town square?

We just may be one socialist elected crash from those tribunals. That is what it takes to achieve “the boiling point”.

At what point will you boil over?

At what point will America?

I know this, we cannot abide the status quo. Not much longer.

Lone Wolves may be one of the better options going forward. Were Mangione more careful not have been caught. I've heard that FBI plants a ton of people into various groups to give nationalist/ethnic groups a bad name, like Timothy McVeigh's Elohim City, the Black Panther Party, the Michigan Governor kidnap plot, and the J6ers. The violence usually is promoted and carried out by FBI "informants." I remember all the videos of agent provocateurs at the 1999 WTO protests in Seattle (granting China WTO membership and other bad decisions) were actually cops in disguise, with them changing out their Antifa like attire back behind police lines among their colleagues, after they had broken windows and started fires to delegitimize the protest. It's hard to thread the needle of successful protesting without being coopted, if you are on YouTube, Facebook and other controlled platforms. Having said that, we do need more Joe McCarthy, MLK Jr, Huey Long, Andrew Jacksons, Thomas Jeffersons and George Washingtons moving forward. Enacting change will be harder with more of these surveillance/data centers in place. Tim Dillon said Saturday that the US Gov has no interest in paying off the $40trillion (or our $200Trillion in unfunded liabilities). I for one would like some reasonable payout for years of SS contributions. :) They better not means test my SS distribution. Anyway, Democrats will have a global war or a staged alien invasion with mass death and the loss of Los Angeles in order to reset the debt. Thank you for your post, Michael.
