Yes on the dependence enabled by the socialists. But the other half is how corporations tether to social responsibility. We have falling sperm counts and far below replacement for our Western populations. Young couples cannot afford homes. The lion's share of production and wealth have gone to the top 1%. The social contract is broken. I enjoyed the dialogue Jeremy Grantham at Diary of a CEO recently. Though he is a dyed in the wool greenie, he has many excellent points. Cheers.

We keep hearing socialism doesn't work, but for the lowest 1/3 of Americans it is working great. Along with the new illegals that have flooded us all here in America. They get everything. Problem is, you need the engine of the middle class to fuel the "free". An engine is breaking down from the strain.
